

00:00:00:00 - 00:00:22:02

Unknown

Tell me something that. Tell me something that I should be optimistic about right now. The future. The future is incredibly optimistic. What will. Although we worry about it forever. I think this is what every parent does. Every grandparent does for all of time, is worried that it's going to be worse for the next generation. It is clearly not.

00:00:22:05 - 00:00:42:29

Unknown

You know, when I was eight years old, I had, a, pen that had I could have a blue color ink. I could push another button down for a red one or a black one. This was technology. Today they've got these iPhones where the whole world is connected. You know, eight, nine, ten, 11 year olds. This is this is insanely better.

00:00:43:01 - 00:01:10:16

Unknown

Health care is going to do nothing but get better housing. And, our ability to make people comfortable. The things that will be made in the innovations will accelerate at a rapid pace due to this fourth revolution of AI. The world is fascinating. It's exciting. You can always fear new. The reality is, when it's with humans, they tend to make things better and better and better.

00:01:10:23 - 00:01:39:21

Unknown

By the way, investing along the way in a better America, works terrifically. And again for 248 years has. And my guess is, I'm very optimistic about the future. About investment returns, about our our our children and our grandchildren. I'm incredibly optimistic. Well, I'm looking back at American history. It does seem that the optimism has tended to prevail over the the pessimists.